COVID-19 Crisis: Impact on Thai society and public health

The COVID-19 virus disease which broke out in China in December 2019 has spread to many other countries and eventually became a pandemic threatening the life of people all over the globe. Despite the relatively low death rate, this infection scared numerous people due to its very rapid spread nearly all over the world. In Thailand, the “lock down” policy, multi-level quarantine, disease investigation and personal hygiene was chosen by the government to control the situation of infection and resulted in a successful control of the disease. Yet the “lock down” policy and the disease itself has made a huge impact on Thai society in many aspects such as the society and economy, environment, politics, education, and public health. The lecture investigates the responses by various actors in Thailand (government, civil society, etc.) and the lessons to be learned in dealing with the Covid-19 pandemic.
